About the Conference

The Legal Profession has always been an important limb for administration of justice. Without profession of law, the courts would not be in a position to administer and provide justice efficiently. It has been rightly said “A well-organized system of judicial administration proposes a properly equipped and proficient Bar.”

The purpose of law in society is to preserve the moral sanctity that binds the society. Therefore, the legal profession is considered a noble profession as it is the upholder and protector of law. It is a service-oriented profession which aims to serve society. Roscoe Pound captured the essence of this sentiment when he wrote, “Historically, there are three ideas involved in a profession: organisation, learning, and a spirit of public service.

Justice Iyer calls the legal profession as “the most brilliant and attractive of peaceful professions, with responsibilities both inside and outside it, which no person carrying on any other profession has to shoulder”.

The Legal profession has been going through a profound revolution due to globalization with increasing participation and involvement of countries and more access to domestic economies. Globalization should not be looked upon in a restrictive sense as it has brought a change in the teaching of law students, training of advocates to hone professional skills to meet the challenges put down by the globalization and universalization of law. To maintain the standard norms of the firms or legal industry we require lawyers capable of handling high profile cases which normally include merger & acquisition, project finance, securities, and initial public offering that are demanded by the foreign firms established in India and domestic firms. India has been putting efforts in maintaining the legal sector services in India, to allow foreign lawyers and firms to locate in India. Few Indian firms have been locating their firms' branches in other countries like the US and UK. This is beneficial as the lawyers will have a wider scope and coverage to the different aspects of the law arena and would be able to practice outside the country. Further, the lawyers need to have original and path-breaking legal research skills to accommodate the need of meeting the challenges in a manner responsive to the country's goals and aims of the constitution.

Bearing all these factors in mind, this International Webinar is being organised to highlight and enlighten all aspects of Legal profession with reference to Globalization. Hope, the Students, Academicians, Industry personnel, Research scholars will be benefitted by this Webinar.
